Belgian Aviators Kill German Officers in Fight Between Rival Aeroplanes—
Both Machines and Their Occupants Were Destroyed—General Von Emmich Has Narrow Escape From Capture by Belgian Raiders—German Army Abandons Liege and Retreat to the North.

(By International News Service)
Brussels, Aug. 6.—The German invasion of Belgium has been smashed.

The war office, in announcing to day that General Von Emmich's columns had been repulsed at Liege and Spa, said:

"The Germans lost at least 8500 killed, wounded and prisoners. The Germans are retreating northward. Belgium's losses in the desperate fighting were small."

Hundreds of German prisoners are arriving daily. Many German wounded have been sent to the hospital. The shells from the Belgian artillery at Liege tore the German soldiers terribly.

It is surprising and bewildering what havoc the Belgian artillery made in the ranks of the German invaders and by one Belgian scouting aviator.

Many German officers were shot, one shell from the aeroplane annihilating a group of them.

Five German aviators eventually attacked the Belgian flyer and the machines destroyed each other and their occupants.

The retreating Germans are being

Heavy Toll Paid by Germans.

Several thousand dead and wounded—the exact number is not known at present—is the toll paid by the German army of the Meuse for its attack on Liege.

The German army consisted of 45,000 men, who were opposed by 40,000 Belgians. The Belgian soldiers made a heroic defense, and repulsed the invaders after heavy and continuous fighting. An official announcement says that no person who passed the fort survived.

The fortified position of Liege had to support on Wednesday the general shock of the German attack. The Belgian forts resisted the advance fiercely and did not suffer. One Belgian squadron attacked and drove back six German squadrons.

Eight hundred wounded Germans were transferred to the city of Liege, where they will be cared for.

The government last night issued a bulletin stating that the Belgians also had won another sweeping victory near Spa, the famous watering place. It is said that the regiments of German Uhlans were also destroyed.

Liege Forts Unharmed.

The fortifications offered admirable resistance to German shells. Evangee fort, which was in action all day, was absolutely unharmed. The Belgian aviators proved as good as the Germans.

Several civilians have been shot at Vire and the town has been burned.

Repairing of North Second Street May be Delayed Awaiting Agreement of Property Owners to Waive Legal Notice Regarding Curbing—Good Health Reported.

Borough council transacted considerable business at a long session on Wednesday evening and listened to complaints and petitions from a number of citizens.

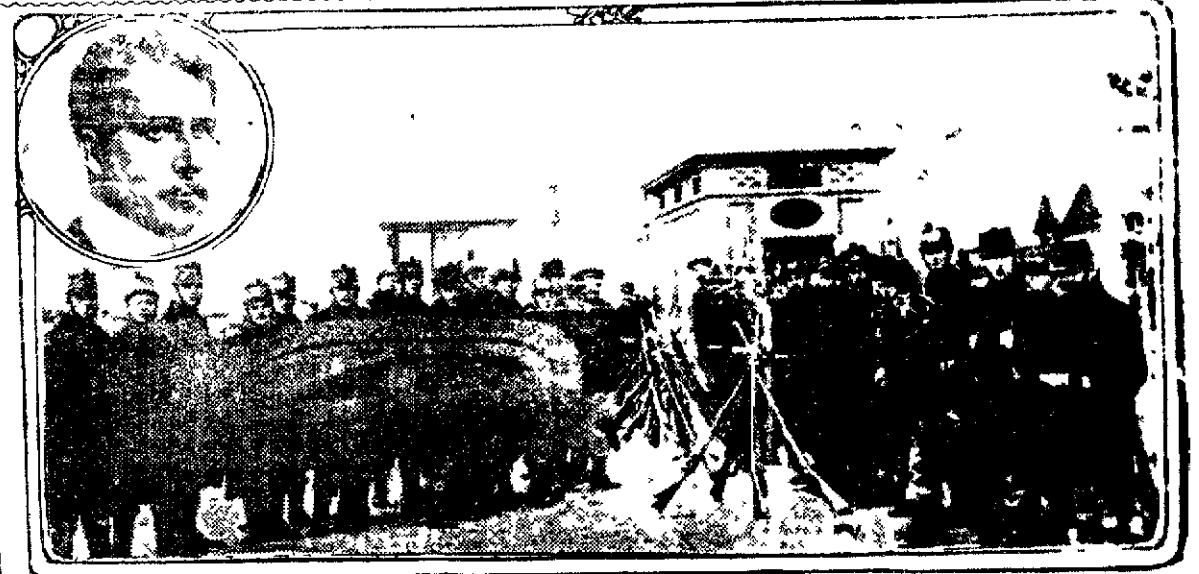

The borough treasurer reported a total balance of $9493.54 in the treasury, distributed as follows:

Borough fund $2725.72
Bond fund, 2077.76
Light and water fund, 4279.16
Firemen's relief fund, 202.19
Shade tree fund 209.22

Reports of heads of departments were read and accepted.

The report of the board of health showed that there were ten cases of communicable disease in the borough in July, four of which were of typhoid fever. The board stated that it feared an epidemic of this disease would have to be fought, but by promptly inspecting the milk and dairy from which the known cases were believed to have originated the board succeeded in confining the disease to the four cases mentioned. The board recommended that several drains be taken care of.

Mrs. Wilson's Condition is Serious

(By International News Service.)

Washington, Aug. 6.—Mrs. Wilson, the president's wife, was reported slightly stronger this morning, following a comparatively restful night. She is conscious at intervals and it is necessary to stimulate respiration.

The president has cancelled all engagements and is conducting state affairs at his wife's bedside.

Dr. Grayson states that "the chief cause of Mrs. Wilson's illness is chronic kidney trouble, the result of a nervous breakdown from overwork."

The house today passed the following resolution of sympathy for the president on account of Mrs. Wilson's condition: Resolved that the house tenders to the president, in this hour of apprehensive sadness, its warmest sympathy and prays that God in His mercy may restore to health his good wife and her helpmate.

MILLION DOLLARS BADLY NEEDED

Money Needed to Finance the Propagation of the Osteopaths to Remove Causes of Disease Through Mechanical Adjustment Instead of Medical Methods of Treatment.

(By International News Service)

Philadelphia, August, 6.—Militant Osteopathy was decided upon at the convention of the American Osteopathic association Wednesday. The convention declared for the removal of the cause of disease by mechanical adjustment in place of the medical method of the treatment of symptoms by means of drugs or other agencies.

A million dollars is solicited from the public for the endowment of the osteopathic research institute which the practitioners have established and paid for out of their own pockets. This is now in running order on a small scale but needs immediately a large endowment in order to enable it to perform its work to the best advantage. This is the only research institution in the world financed exclusively by physicians.

Dr. R. Kenrick Smith, of Boston referred to the great work being done by the American Medical association, in the propagation of publicity regarding the prevention of disease, citing in particular the fact that allopathic physicians spoke from the pulpit in fifty churches in Philadelphia during the June convention of the medical association.

While the main purposes of these addresses and of the enormous amount of medical advice which is being published in the newspapers and magazines constantly all over the country is for the better health of the people, he said, there is between the lines a selfish purpose which is not quite discernible to the general public. This purpose becomes more evident, he said, when it is realized that the American Medical association is not what its name implies, an association open to all American physicians, but is an exclusive organization of old school practitioners, that division of medicine known as allopathic.

A most important step undertaken for conquest of the white plague was announced at the convention. Dr. Louisa Burns, director of clinics at the Pacific College of Osteopathy, Los Angeles, gave the first news of the important discovery. She declared that she and her co-workers have found out how to recognize the presence of the disease before it manifests itself by any of the symptoms heretofore known. This makes it possible to take steps early enough to cure every case, as it is well known that the disease can always be cured if treatment is begun early enough and that failure is merely the result of a postponed diagnosis.

This newly discovered diagnosis was announced by Dr. Burns as the recognition that an examination of the blood pressure of apparently well people discloses the presence or absence of incipient tuberculosis. Dr. Burns said in part:

"This report is based upon a study of the blood pressure of more than 1200 persons, including about 900 patients examined in the clinics of the Pacific College of Osteopathy, and about 300 normal persons of varying ages and habits. From three to twenty or more different tests were made for each person. The lowest pressure recorded was 45 and the highest, that of a man 73 years old with arteriosclerosis, 285.

"These studies indicate: by means of watching the blood pressure, tuberculosis may be recognized at a very early time—before other symptoms appear. Changes in blood pressure may be easily and quickly relieved by the osteopathic measures for lowering or raising the blood pressure."

THE SPIT BALL NOT USED MUCH

BY FRANK G. MENKE.
(By International News Service)

The spit-ball is falling into disuse. Very few of the twirlers in the big leagues are using it today, and those who do are using it sparingly. The wise pitchers have cast it aside, knowing that even though the use of the moist fling may add to their strength of victories it will mean the shortening of their careers.

Jack Chesbro, used it back in 1904 when he almost pitched the Yankees into the leadership of the league. But the use of the spit-ball practically ruined Chesbro as a star performer. Ed. Walsh used the spit-ball for several years and his success was phenomenal. But the price was high, for Walsh's arm today is in such condition that he never knows whether it will serve him the full route or whether a kink will appear and force him to surrender the hurling job to a relief pitcher.

They don't come back, eh? Well, look at what "Slim" Caldwell, a Yankee twirler, is doing these days.

"Slim," regarded as "all in" at the close of the 1913 season, has won eighteen games and lost seven this year for an average of .720 against a team average slightly over .400. The best part of Caldwell's showing is that practically all of his games have been small hit and small run affairs, with about a half dozen shutout victories mixed in.

If Caldwell, pitching in his present form, had the batting and fielding strength of the Athletics or Giants behind him, it is doubtful if he would have lost more than three of the 25 games he has pitched. The Yanks have played miserable baseball behind Caldwell at times and tossed away at least four games.

Caldwell wasn't of much use to the Yanks last year. He developed a sore arm soon after the season started. Instead of getting better, it became worse as the season drew to a close. Discouraged, Caldwell told his teammates:

"Next year 'Slim' will be back pounding the telegraph key while you fellows are frisking around in the sunshine. My arm is gone, I guess, and so I'm through."

Pitcher Jack Warhop later sidled over to "Slim" and slipped him an osteopath's card.

"Go and see him," advised Warhop. Caldwell did, and the kink was rubbed out of his arm in about four visits.

Here is what James P. Sinnott, writing in the New York Evening Mail, had to say recently after a visit to the rival ball clubs in Brooklyn:

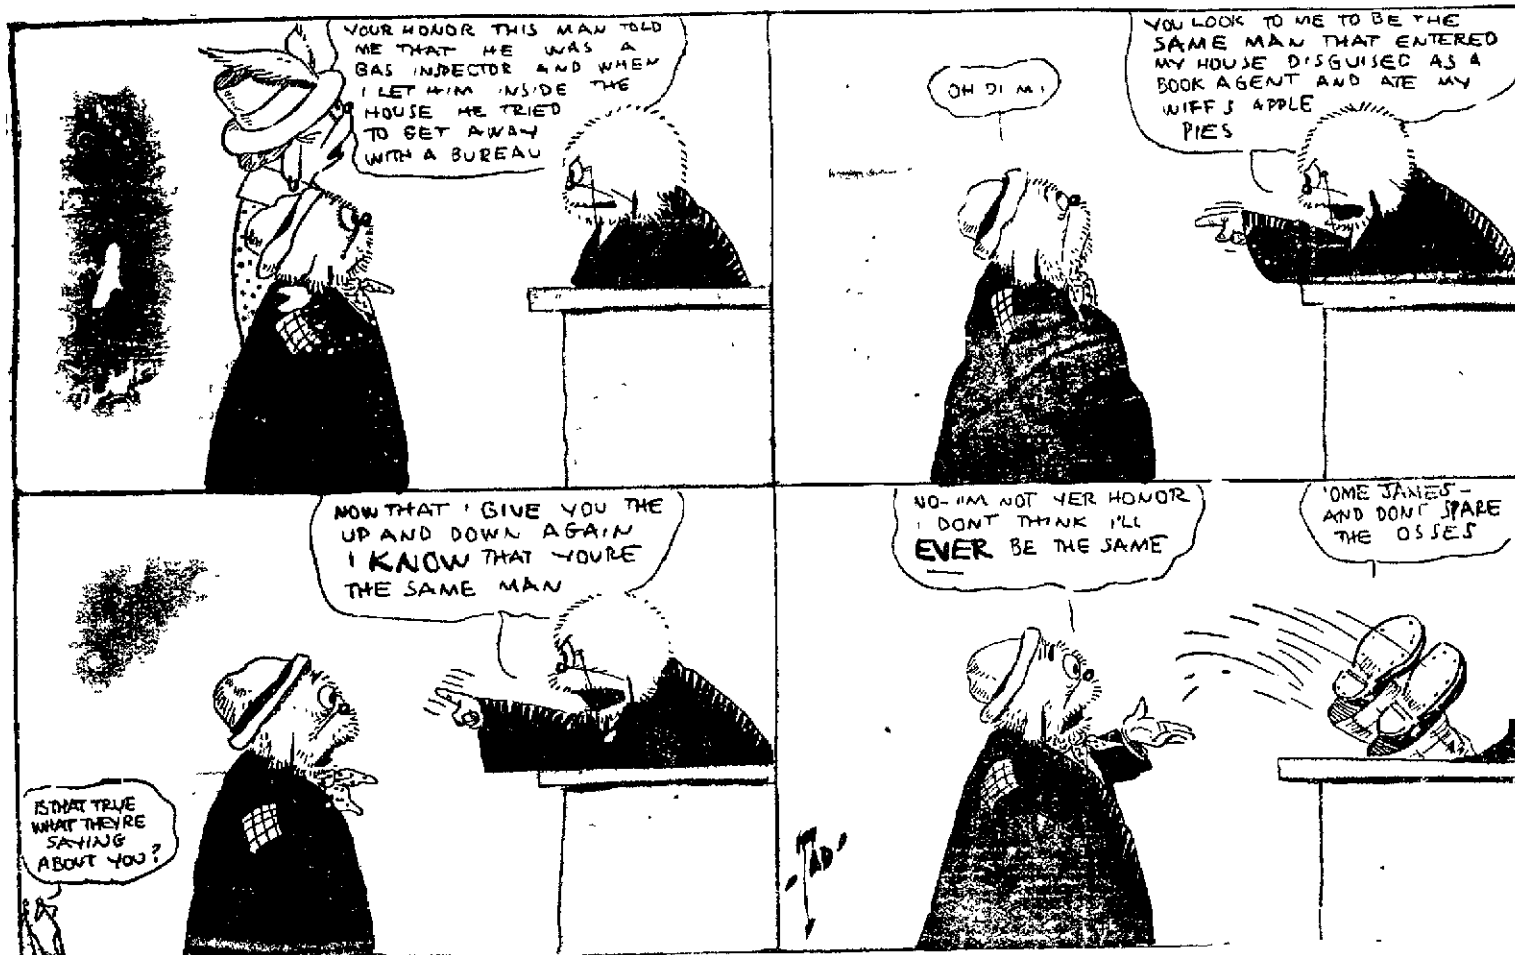

"Looking at the Brookfeds and Dodgers both on the same day, gives one a pretty good idea of their relative strength. To the writer's mind, the Brookfeds looked faster than the Dodgers, and even than the Reds.

"There is no doubting the fact that the Federals are giving a major league brand of ball, at least judged by the Brooklyn standard. The most radical of anti-Federalists, we believe will concede this—if they saw them play.

But that is just the trouble. The most bitter critics of the outlaws have as a rule, never seen them perform. Yet, unhesitatingly, they tell you the Having garnered about all the loose change in Alastria, the American gang of pugs who have been fighting in those parts for some months are now preparing for the homeward journey. Among those who plan to sail back to America this month are Jimmy Claby, Young Shugine, Edie McGoorty and Young Saylor.

Willie Ritchie isn't as disconsolate over the loss of his title as he was when he first lost it. He just has learned that Ad. Wolgast has made more money as an ex-champion than he did as a champion.

Willie, therefore, plans to set about this fall and winter and find out for himself just how easy the pickin's are. He probably will be matched with Charley White, of Chicago, in a twenty round bout and may go against Ad. Wolgast, Tommy Murphy, and Leach Cross in Coast battles.

Among the seedling fall apples, which have been recently sent to the Geneva experiment station the Livingston Pride deserves mention. It is a chance seedling from Orange county. It is not a dessert fruit, but is probably worth testing for culinary use. Season is the last of September and well into October.

ALL EUROPE IN ARMS

With the exception of Italy and a few second class nations all Europe is in arms. Italy is the only first-class power which has not yet declared war, but it is doubtful if she can long remain out of the fray. The final result of the war cannot even be dreamed of. That there will be sanguinary fights, the slaying of thousands of men and the destruction of much property, can be foretold, but no one can estimate the devastation that will follow in the path of war.

Germany, although professing to desire peace, has proven herself a very active warrior. The telegraph is news sent from the fields of operation state that German soldiers burn towns and destroy property in their path. The kaiser, however, evidently believes that this is the proper way to carry on war, as he asks his subjects to pray for success. To the people of America it would appear that the Lord is not taking much cognizance of any of the belligerents. He certainly does not approve of modern methods of warfare or excuse nations which have for going to war over trifles.

The little interest Americans take in the war is almost phenomenal. There are a good many people, whose ancestors came from countries involved in the struggle, who read the war news, but a majority of the Americans are content to read the headlines in the newspapers. In Clearfield there is considerable interest taken in the war, as is attested by the crowds which gather around the bulletins posted in the office window of the Progress and by the fact that the subscription list of this paper is being added to in a most gratifying manner. The war news dispatched to the Progress is fresh and reliable, as is confirmed by the daily newspapers in the big cities the next day.

The kaiser's prayers seem to have been answered contrariwise thus far.

Don't forget that Clearfield will have a big time on Labor day.

The joy rider was also among those present at the Frenchville picnic.

But isn't it just as well to let the

MASSIVE FORTIFICATIONS ON THE FRONTIER OF BELGIUM

Washington, Aug. 6.—American army officers think in the campaign through Belgium lies Germany's only hope of marching her soldiers into France. Even allowing for the necessity of crushing the Belgian army, the experts here regard this as the most feasible point of attack.

For nearly forty years the French engineers, among the ablest in the world in scientific design, have been laboring like beavers constructing fortifications of earth and steel, even including great revolving turrets like those of a dreadnaught, that now practically cover every mile of the frontier between France and Germany and south of Belgium. In the estimate of army engineers, these defenses are invulnerable except as against an army vastly outnumbering the French forces behind the parapets and in the rifle pits.

The beginning of the campaign in Belgium had been expected here and the outcome is being awaited with great interest by the general staff. The belief is that the Belgians for the present will confine themselves to obstructive tactics on the German frontier, feinting and skirmishing and falling back so as to reduce their percentage of loss and losing no opportunity to harass the advancing German army, and, if possible, to cut its line of communication.

While this is going on American strategists believe the French forces, which are very numerous in the neighborhood of Rheims, and to the north and south of that fortress, will come to the aid of the Belgians.

Thus, it was suggested, within one year of a century after the defeat of Napoleon at Waterloo the Germans and French and Belgians may again come together in a desperate and decisive battle in almost the same theatre of war.

MANY ALIENS TAKE OUT THEIR FIRST PAPERS HERE

The statement going the rounds of the newspapers that hundreds of aliens had applied for their first naturalization papers in one day at the prothonotary's office here is incorrect. There are quite a number of applications for first papers in this county, but not as many as has been reported.

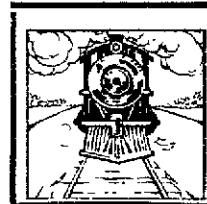

Since the first of the present year first papers have been issued by the prothonotary's office to 190 aliens, the applicants renouncing allegiance to the rulers of their native land being distributed among the following nationalities:

Austria	62
Italy	30
Russia	23
Hungary	22
Germany	17
England	15
Sweden	8
Scotland	5
France	2
Canada	2
Poland	1

Many of these men declared that they had no desire to return to fight for their native lands.

SAGE TEA KEEPS YOUR HAIR DARK

When Mixed with Sulphur It Brings Back Its Lustre and Abundance.

Gray hair, however handsome, denotes advancing age. We all know the advantages of a youthful appearance. Your hair is your charm. It makes or mars the face. When it fades, turns gray and looks dry, wispy and scraggly, just a few applications of Sage Tea and Sulphur enhances its appearance a hundred-fold.

Don't stay gray! Look young! Either prepare the tonic at home or get from any drug store a 50 cent bottle.

Use of "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Hair Remedy." Thousands of folks recommend this ready-to-use preparation, because it darkens the hair beautifully, and removes dandruff, stops scalp itching and falling hair; besides, no one can possibly tell, as it darkens so naturally and evenly. You moisten a sponge or soft brush with it, drawing this through the hair, taking one small strand at a time. By morning the gray hair disappears; after another application or two, its natural color is restored and it becomes thick, glossy and lustrous, and you appear years younger.

WHEN FRANCE AND PRUSSIA FOUGHT

War of Forty-Four Years Ago Recalled by Present Events

NAPOLEON'S DEFEAT RECALLED

Brief Story of the Struggle in Which the French Were Worst and Paris Captured by the Prussians—Another Von Moltke Was in the Field Then.

(By International News Service.)

New York, Aug. 6.—When the Prussians under Kaiser Wilhelm I, with Count Bismarck and Gen. von Moltke, started the movement against Paris forty-four years ago the German troops were met with fierce resistance on every hand. From the time they crossed the border into France it took the Germans a full six months to capture the French capital.

The first order to mobilize the Prussian army was given by Kaiser Wilhelm I on July 1870. France declared war four days later. Three armies were put in the field by the Prussians. The first was under Gen. von Steinmetz near Trever, the second under Prince Frederick Charles in the Reinisch Palatinate, and the third under the Crown Prince of Prussia on the frontier of Baden. Fifteen days after the mobilization order had been given Prussia had 520,000 men under arms.

A line 100 miles long from Montmedy on the Belgian frontier to Belfort at the junction of the Swiss and German borders, was covered by an army of 350,000 men under Napoleon III. The French army was divided into eight army corps with Marshal MacMahon near Strassburg, Gen. Faidy at Betsch, on the Palatinate frontier; Marshal Bazaine near Metz, Gen. Frossard at Saint Avold, near the Prussian frontier; Gen. Ladmirault at Thionville (now called Diedenhofen by the Germans); the reserve corps under Gen. Bombaki and Marshal Canrobert at Nancy and Chalons and Gen. Felix Douay holding the fortress at Belfort.

It was July 28 that Emperor Napoleon left Paris to take command at Metz and on August 2 Kaiser Wilhelm with Count Bismarck and Gen. von Moltke took the field with headquarters at Maniz.

Searbrucken was attacked and captured on August 2 by Frossard. France was invaded by the German crown prince on August 4. He engaged the French under Douay, at Weissenburg and drove them back after a terrific five-hour fight in which the losses were heavy on both sides.

Again two days later the crown prince engaged the French. This time he met MacMahon's men at Zorn and forced them to retreat in disorder. Stainmetz, in the meantime routed Frossard's corps at Spichern, driving the French back to Metz and Forbach.

Following these disastrous defeats the eight French corps were consolidated into two armies, one under Bazaine at Metz and the other under MacMahon at Chalons. It was shortly thereafter that the northern part of Alsace was abandoned while the French retreated along the Moselle.

On August 8, the crown-prince left Worth to push on through the passes of the Vosges to Nancy. He entered the city on August 16. In the meantime Steinmetz was the most active man in the German army. He took Forbach on the 7th, St. Avold on the 9th, and on the 14th was near Metz. In the battle of Colombey-Nouilly, Gen. Von Moltke prevented the junction of the two retreating French armies.

Bent on the capture of Metz, Prince Frederick Charles took part of his army via Searbrucken and part through Seargemund, and on the 16th of August drove Bazaine back on Crellorow. He was defeated on the 18th and cornered in the fortifications of Metz.

On August 19 the Prussians formed a fourth army to move rapidly through the plains of Champagne to Paris. The Crown Prince of Saxony was placed in charge of this fourth command. One hundred and thirty thousand men were concentrated at Cholon under MacMahon to defend Paris. On August 21 MacMahon moved to Rheims, and under orders from Paris attempted to relieve Metz. His division was cut off by the Prussians at Sedan, surrounded and overwhelmed. He surrendered on September 2, being taken prisoner with the emperor. The battle of Sedan was the most disastrous of the entire war.

The surrender of Strassburg came September 28 and on October 11, Gen. Vonder Tann occupied Orleans. Metz was surrendered by Bazaine on October 27. Gen. de Callasiness, in a heroic effort, recaptured Orleans from the Prussians on November 10, but was defeated in a battle lasting from December 2 till December 4.

In vain Gen. Ducrot tried to break the strong Prussian lines at Berle, and on December 29 the Prussians captured Mount Averon one of the forts defending Paris. Rouen was captured by the Prussians on December 6 and the French were overwhelmed at St. Quentin January 19. Paris finally capitulated on December 28, 1871.

BOROUGH COUNCIL IN LONG SESSION

which would be vacated for anything else than a street. He asked that the matter be attended to. He is willing to give a bond indemnifying the borough from any damage which might be suffered by any person through the straightening of the street.

Hazard Murray, Esq., spoke in opposition to the paving of what is known as an extension of the "Boodle" alley. He thought the property owners in that alley should not be asked to pay for a pavement which would be of benefit to nobody but a garage owner.

Mr. Hagerty, of the finance committee, reported that he had interviewed Mr. Kurtz, and the latter had said he would print the borough bonds for $75.

Mr. Heck reported that his committee was opposed to permitting the placing of gasoline tanks under the sidewalk of the borough because of the damage to adjoining property.

The proposition of Contractor Ferguson to construct the combined curbing and gutter on North Second street at his bid of 53 cents per lineal foot, was reported favorably by the utilities committee. This work cannot be done until after property owners shall have been given 30 days notice that the curbing and gutters will be constructed. Some of the property owners are opposed to the placing of new curbing.

President Kerr appointed Burgess Callahan, Borough Solicitor Urey and Eugene Hess, with himself, to call on the property owners to see if they will waive the 30 days notice.

The committee's report on the bid of Mr. Ferguson, accepting his bid for the curbing, was adopted.

An ordinance relating to the improvement bond issue was passed.

The resignation of H. S. Buck, member of council from the Fourth ward, was accepted. Mr. Buck's work on the railroad prevents his regular attendance at council meeting. The Fourth ward members were asked to suggest candidates to fill the vacancy resulting from Mr. Buck's resignation.

The ladies in charge of the public playground sent a communication in regard to what apparatus they proposed to buy for the amusement of the children. Council appropriated $150 to the purpose, providing the apparatus be placed under supervision of the public property committee.

Council decided to advertise the entire issue of improvement bonds at once.

An ordinance providing for the construction of a sewer on Hannah street was passed.

It was decided to advertise for plans and specifications for the new fire houses in the Second and Fourth wards and for bids for the erection of the same.

The street commissioner was directed to start the work of constructing the Spruce street sewer.

Other matters of more or less moment were discussed and acted upon, council adjourning before midnight.

"In Sea."

"The Castaways" is a thrilling narrative dramatized from the famous novel written by Jules Verne. It is a thrilling story of the search of the children of Captain Grant for him when he had been castaway on a desert island. The search leads them through all kinds of dangerous and hazardous scenes, boats pass but do not at first see the frantic signaling of the men cast upon the island. This picture in 5 reels will be shown this evening at the New opera house.

"The Girl and the Hobo" is a frontier comedy in one act which will be shown at the opera house this evening. This story was written to make people laugh and it has succeeded, for no person in the audience can help joining in the hearty laughter that the funny scenes show.

"Thou Shalt Not Steal" is a photo play in 2 reels which will be shown at the new opera house this evening. It is a real live drama with an interesting plot.

Besides the good program which the manager of the opera house has prepared for his patrons he has another pleasure in store for them.

The stubs of tickets used at the opera house this evening will be good for a drink at Dooly & Stewart drug store.

Mary Fuller, the supreme screen star, will enact the lead in "The Heart of the Night Wind," and this will be her first picture with the Universal Film company. Accompanied by her director, Walter Edwin together with Charles Ogle, Ed Mortimer and an enlarged company, Miss Fuller left New York, July 17, for Shohola, Pike county, Pa., where amid some of the most beautiful settings in America, this play and several others, including "Heart of the Hills" by Hal Reid, will be produced.

"The Heart of the Night Wind" is from the book of Vingie E. E. Roe, and was adapted to picture form by Captain Leslie T. Penelope, of the Universal scenario department. In three reels, the play allows Miss Fuller a splendid part, combining vigor, emotion and some highly spectacular scenes.

The Adventures of Kathlyn

By HAROLD MAC GRATH

Illustrated by Pictures from the Moving Picture Production of the Selig Polyscope Co.

(Copyright by Harold MacGrath)

"But we cheered the white goddess that day! There are men who will swear that her feet never touched the earth as she walked. But I knew that she was the daughter of Colonel Sahib,

A Woman Who Loved Him Hid Him in a Palanquin.

and that she had red blood in her veins, like the rest of us. Women are mysteries. Here was one who fought like an ancient warrior; and yet she swooned in her father's arms! That is all today, hazard. I am an old man, and my throat dries quickly. Come tomorrow and I will tell you more."

But tomorrow comes to find you interested in something else; and the old beggar jingles his bowl before the steps of the mosque, patiently waiting for another listener.

"Kit, Kit!" cried Kathlyn's father when she came to her senses. "My girl, my girl!"

"Dad!"

"How could you do it?"

"Do what?" vaguely.

"Lead a forlorn cause to victory; you, a girl!"

She brushed back the hair which tumbled about her eyes, glanced at the powder-stained faces grouped about her, glanced at the toppled throne, at Bruce, at Ramabai. She made an effort to explain, but the words would not come.

"I would not question her," said Bruce to the colonel. "For my part, I never so thoroughly believed in God as I do now. She does not realize what she has done."

The colonel bent his head reverently.

"We owe our lives to her," said Ramabai. "Somewhere in the dim ages there was a great mother, and today her soul entered the memsahib."

"Mine!" murmured Bruce. "This beautiful, strange woman is mine! God send the day quickly when I can take her in my arms and guard her! Ramabai," he said aloud, "go to the balcony and proclaim Pundita queen. Let us have done with this before there is any chance of Umballa recovering. What shall we do with the Council?"

"Wait!" responded Ramabai. "It is for another to say." And he pointed to the marble flags at his feet.

And all understood what honor meant to this man of dark skin.

"Now," he continued, "I wish to go home at once. We will leave a sufficient guard here to watch over the palace. My wife waits; and the death of Lal Singh may have—"

The same thought flashed through Kathlyn's mind; the dagger. Dying Lal Singh had declared that Ramabai was a prisoner; and well would Pundita comprehend what that meant.

"Yes, yes! let us go quickly!" Kathlyn cried. Pundita might be dead and Winnie crazed with grief.

They left the palace immediately.

The overthrow of Umballa seemed to be complete. Everywhere the soldiers surrendered; for it was better to have road in the stomach than lead. Tomorrow there would be many a pyre at the burning ghats, but today was a day of victory.

Every one began to hunt for Umballa. There was as yet no price on his head; it was the zest of hunting only that set the people to it. They ran in and out of Umballa's house, and were not above looting, though word had come forth that Ramabai would have every looter shot if found in the act. But search as they would, they could find no trace of Umballa.

A woman who loved him—the only one loyal to him in all Allahabad that day—had hidden him in a palanquin in the garden of brides. Crouched down in the narrow space shuddering at the sound of shot, whether near or far, for a thousand deaths, wishing he had been taken from the gutter, he gave up his jewels, his life to live.

The woman of the zenana, when the tumult died away completely, found some slaves. She made them divest themselves of the royal turbans and assume ordinary white ones. Then she told them to carry the palanquin to a certain house in the fruit bazaar, to go by side streets, alleys, passages, to avoid all gatherings. Once in the house of her sister, the dancer, Umballa would be safe till he could secretly return to his own house and enter the secret chamber.

When Kathlyn left the palace a thunder of cheers greeted her. Kathlyn was forced to mount the durbar throne, much as she longed to be off. But Bruce anticipated her thought and dispatched one of the revolutionists to the house of Ramabai. Kathlyn held out her hands towards the excited populace, then turned to Ramabai expressively. Ramabai, calm and unruffled as ever, stepped forward and was about to address the people, when the disheveled captain of the guard, whom Umballa had sent to the arena lions, pushed his way to the foot of the platform.

"The arena lions have escaped!"

And there were a dozen lions in all, strong, cruel, and no doubt hungry!

Panic. Men who had been at each other's throat, bravely and hardily, turned and fled. It was a foolish panic, senseless, but, like all panics, uncontrollable. Those on the platform ran down the steps and at once were swallowed up by the pressing, trampling crowd.

Bruce and the colonel, believing that Kathlyn was behind them, fought their way to a clearing, determined to secure nets and take the lions alive. When they turned Kathlyn was gone. For a moment the two men stood as if paralyzed. Then Bruce relieved the tension by smiling. He laid his hand on the colonel's shoulder.

"She has lost us; but that will not matter. Ordinarily I should be wild with anxiety; but today Kathlyn may go where she will, and nothing but awe and reverence will follow her. Besides, she has her revolver."

"I believe you're right. She will miss us and start right off for Ramabai's. Boy, she is a goddess. She is supernatural."

"She was this morning. As God is judge, I do not believe she understands or ever will understand what she did. You noticed her eyes? They were like those of a person in a trance. Think of it. To turn the tide at the supreme moment! That coat of mail; her hair falling about her head."

"Ah, colonel, what's the use of beating about the bush? You know I love her. Will you give her to me?"

Without a moment's hesitation the colonel said: "Yes, John. You have proved yourself a man. God bless you both! But we're not out of the woods yet. We've got to find Umballa and lock him up. When that's done I'll be able to breathe."

"I believe it is as Ahmed says: we'll all pull out of this safely in the end. Now, let's go and get the nets. There will not be a dozen men in the whole town who will have sense enough to shoot the lions as they appear. They'll howl and run for shelter. Ramabai's welcome to Allah. Hi, there's one now; see, coming round the corner! I'll put him."

But ere Bruce could level his weapon the lion turned back, perhaps frightened at the clamor.

Kathlyn was not alarmed upon finding herself separated from the two men she loved so well. Her only concern was to avoid being knocked down and trampled upon. She knew animals. If left quietly to themselves the lions would make for the jungle, but if harried or frightened they would maul any one within reach.

Kathlyn was packed in rather closely, and she was carried past the street which led to the house of Ramabai, though she struggled desperately to push through. She was presently carried into the bazaars. The people in their senseless flight tried to do what they could for her, but self-preservation was their first thought. And it wasn't the cleanest smelling crowd in the world, either.

At the same time Kathlyn was fighting vigorously to get free of the mob. Winnie was struggling with Pundita, striving to wrench the dagger from the grief-stricken wife's hand.

"No, no, Pundita!"

"Let me go! My lord is dead, and I wish to follow!"

"You are a Christian!"

"At all!"

"But he may not be dead. Help, help!"

"Is not Lal Singh there dead? Is that not proof?"

Hither and thither across the floor they fought. But Winnie soon realized that Pundita, being in a frenzy, was strongest. The struggle ended quickly, however, but not through Winnie's efforts. Pundita did something unexpected; she fainted, dragging Winnie to the floor with her. The young girl's head came into contact with the wall, and she was stunned for a moment.

ment. Upon sitting up she did not know exactly where she was. But the calm, high-bred face of the dead Lal Singh recalled the situation clearly, and she went about the resuscitation of Pundita.

As the latter's eyes opened wildly Winnie heard a pounding at the door. She was pulled two ways. If she answered the summons Pundita might take advantage of her absence and kill herself. Again, it might be the help for which she had called.

Instinctively she snatched up the fallen dagger, ran to the door, peered out cautiously, and recognized one of the revolutionists who had left the house but an hour or two since. She lunged open the door.

"Pundita?" cried the man.

Winnie caught him by the sleeve and dragged him into the chamber just in time. The distracted Pundita had plucked another dagger from the wall, and the man stayed her arm even as she struck.

"Highness," he cried, "he lives!" And he recounted the startling events of the morning, the treachery of the palace troops, the coming of Kathlyn in chain armor, the turn of the tide.

"They live!" cried Pundita, and covered her face.

Winnie had not understood a word said, but the expression on Pundita's face was illuminative. She threw her arms around the native woman, and the two of them went in common. All human beings have two faculties alike, that of weeping and laughing.

To return to Kathlyn: by and by she was able to slip into a doorway, and the bawling rabble passed on down the narrow street. The house was deserted, and the hallway and what had been a booth was filled with rubbish. Kathlyn, as she leaned breathlessly against the door, felt it give. And very glad she was of this knowledge a moment later, when two lions galloped into the street, their manes still, their tails arched. Doubtless, they were badly frightened.

Kathlyn reached for the revolver she carried and fired at the animals, not expecting to hit one of them, but hoping that the noise of the firearms would serve them into the passage across the way. Instead, they came straight to where she stood.

She stepped inside and slammed the door, holding it and feeling about in vain for lock or bolt.

Evidently the lions had halted outside, undecided, for she could hear them sniffling at the doorsill. If they leaped she was lost, for she could not hope to hold the door against the onrush of beasts as heavy as these lions were.

Elsewhere in the bazaars the colonel, Bruce, and Ahmed were setting nets for the recapture of the lions, quite confident that Kathlyn was by this time safe in the haven of Ramabai's house.

The girl glanced hurriedly over her shoulder toward the dim rickety staircase. The moment the sniffling ceased she withdrew from the door and ran up the stairs to the first landing, to find all these doors lockless! A crash below announced that the lions had heard her and had entered. There was a second flight, and up this flew the girl. She might fire at the beasts, and even if she succeeded in hitting them it would serve only to madden them. One cannot kill lions with a toy.

Still lockless doors! No safety. She then espied a ladder which gave to the roof top, and up this she climbed. They could not possibly follow her up the ladder, and as she reached the top she knew that for the present she had nothing to fear from the lions.

The interior of the house was of the flimsiest wood, slovenly put together. Along the roof was a parapet. She left the trap open so that she could see all that went on below. Almost as she looked the tawny bodies swept up to the foot of the ladder, and there remained, snarling and spitting and reaching up as far as they could. Somewhere on the way Kathlyn knew that these lions had tasted blood.

It was in this street dwelt the sister of the woman in the zenana, the woman who loved Umballa.

Kathlyn leaned over the parapet, the street was totally deserted. All the doors of the shops were closed and the windows shut. She must fight it out alone. She drew a deep breath and squared her shoulders, a trick she had long ago learned from her father. She had fought battles alone ere this, so she was not without confidence. Perhaps the lions, finding their efforts futile, would depart. She must wait.

It grew to noon. The sun beat down upon her savagely. Here and there she could see fires in the city. Pillage. The muezzin's tower of the mosque was like a finger pointing to heaven. She could even glimpse a patch of white stucco which belonged to the palace.

And she had fought her way that morning to the steps of the palace, as the daughter of the Goth had scaled

the steps of the Quirinal in Rome! It was unbelievable! She could not remember anything but the dead Lal Singh and the strong arms of her father as she came out of her swoon. And she had turned defeat into victory! She drew her hand across her eyes.

"The Arena Lions Have Escaped!"

One of the lions sent up a nerve-shaking roar; but Kathlyn did not stir. Silence.

Then, round the passage she saw a palanquin, carried by slaves. She leaned far over.

"Help!" she cried. "Help!"

The bearers paused abruptly, and the curtain of the palanquin was swept back. The dark sinister visage of Umballa was revealed.

"Thou?" he said. Then his laughter rose up to the girl, motionless through her terror. "Come down, O houri of Allah! Come to the arms of Durga Ram, who loves you! Will not? Wee to thee!" dropping his mockery.

"Yes, Durga Ram, it is I!" replied Kathlyn, finding her voice, insensate rage usurping the throne of terror. "Here I am! come and take me!"

Let him face the lions!

Umballa left the palanquin, opened the door of the house, espied the rubbish in the hall; was in the act of mounting the first steps when one of the lions roared again. Drunk as he was, filled with a drunkard's courage, Umballa started back. The lions! Out into the street he went. He turned to the bearers and ordered them to fire the inflammables in the hall. But they refused, for they recognized the chain armor. Mad with rage, Umballa struck at them, entered the hall again, and threw a lighted match into the rubbish.

He left the horrified bearers and staggered to the house where he was to find shelter. He was admitted, the door closed and barred. From a window he watched the progress of the fire. At last! He would pass from Allah, but not without his revenge. It was sweet! She could not escape; the lions would bar the way till it was too late. Let her God save her if he could!

Marshmallow Pudding.
One-half pound marshmallows, each cut into three or four pieces with scissors into a dish you will serve it from. Add one can shredded pineapple and let stand several hours. Just before serving cover top with whipped cream. This is truly delicious. You can substitute any other fruit, but I am very fond of the pineapple.

Raspberry Whip.
Simplest of all raspberry desserts is raspberry whip. This calls for the whites of egg beaten very light, flavored to taste with powdered sugar and mixed with the fresh juice of crushed raspberries. It should be mixed just before serving.

Belgian Aviators Kill German Officers in Fight Between Rival Aeroplanes—
Both Machines and Their Occupants Were Destroyed—General Von Emmich Has Narrow Escape From Capture by Belgian Raiders—German Army Abandons Liege and Retreat to the North.

(By International News Service)
Brussels, Aug. 6.—The German invasion of Belgium has been smashed.

The war office, in announcing to day that General Von Emmich's columns had been repulsed at Liege and Spa, said:

"The Germans lost at least 8500 killed, wounded and prisoners. The Germans are retreating northward. Belgium's losses in the desperate fighting were small."

Hundreds of German prisoners are arriving daily. Many German wounded have been sent to the hospital. The shells from the Belgian artillery at Liege tore the German soldiers terribly.

It is surprising and bewildering what havoc the Belgian artillery made in the ranks of the German invaders and by one Belgian scouting aviator.

Many German officers were shot, one shell from the aeroplane annihilating a group of them.

Five German aviators eventually attacked the Belgian flyer and the machines destroyed each other and their occupants.

The retreating Germans are being

Reports of heads of departments were read and accepted.

The report of the board of health showed that there were ten cases of communicable disease in the borough in July, four of which were of typhoid fever.

The board stated that it feared an epidemic of this disease would have to be fought, but by promptly inspecting the milk and dairy from which the known cases were believed to have originated the board succeeded in confining the disease to the four cases mentioned. The board recommended that several drains be taken care of.

Amos Hess appeared to ask information relative to the straightening of Latimer street. He stated that he borough cannot use the strip of land.

Seventy English sailors were wounded. One hundred Germans are reported to have been killed.

The battle was between England's third flotilla and a flying squadron of German ships sent out to protect mine laying operations.

The liner Koenigen Luise, equipped as a mine layer, was sunk and two German boats later surrendered.

The Amphion, the English flagship, was put temporarily out of commission by an exploding shell damaging her batteries.

Two hundred German prisoners from the boats that surrendered were taken to Harwich, England. A torpedo boat rushed 28 wounded to the Shotley naval station, opposite Harwich, and scores of wounded were later landed at Harwich.

OSTEOPATHS AND THE ALLOPATHS

Former Declares the Latter Are Organizing a Medical Trust

MILLION DOLLARS BADLY NEEDED

Money Needed to Finance the Propagation of the Osteopaths to Remove Causes of Disease Through Mechanical Adjustment Instead of Medical Methods of Treatment.

(By International News Service)

Philadelphia, August, 6.—Militant Osteopathy was decided upon at the convention of the American Osteopathic association Wednesday. The convention declared for the removal of the cause of disease by mechanical adjustment in place of the medical method of the treatment of symptoms by means of drugs or other agencies.

A million dollars is solicited from the public for the endowment of the osteopathic research institute which the practitioners have established and paid for out of their own pockets. This is now in running order on a small scale but needs immediately a large endowment in order to enable it to perform its work to the best advantage. This is the only research institution in the world financed exclusively by physicians.

Dr. R. Kenrick Smith, of Boston referred to the great work being done by the American Medical association, in the propagation of publicity regarding the prevention of disease, citing in particular the fact that allopathic physicians spoke from the pulpit in fifty churches in Philadelphia during the June convention of the medical association.

While the main purposes of these addresses and of the enormous amount of medical advice which is being published in the newspapers and magazines constantly all over the country is for the better health of the people, he said, there is between the lines a selfish purpose which is not quite discernible to the general public. This purpose becomes more evident, he said, when it is realized that the American Medical association is not what its name implies, an association open to all American physicians, but is an exclusive organization of old school practitioners, that division of medicine known as allopathic.

A most important step undertaken for conquest of the white plague was announced at the convention. Dr. Louisa Burns, director of clinics at the Pacific College of Osteopathy, Los Angeles, gave the first news of the important discovery. She declared that she and her co-workers have found out how to recognize the presence of the disease before it manifests itself by any of the symptoms heretofore known. This makes it possible to take steps early enough to cure every case, as it is well known that the disease can always be cured if treatment is begun early enough and that failure is merely the result of a postponed diagnosis.

This newly discovered diagnosis was announced by Dr. Burns as the recognition that an examination of the blood pressure of apparently well people discloses the presence or absence of incipient tuberculosis. Dr. Burns said in part:

"This report is based upon a study of the blood pressure of more than 1200 persons, including about 900 patients examined in the clinics of the Pacific College of Osteopathy, and about 300 normal persons of varying ages and habits. From three to twenty or more different tests were made for each person. The lowest pressure recorded was 45 and the highest, that of a man 73 years old with arteriosclerosis, 285.

"These studies indicate: by means of watching the blood pressure, tuberculosis may be recognized at a very early time—before other symptoms appear. Changes in blood pressure may be easily and quickly relieved by the osteopathic measures for lowering or raising the blood pressure."

THE SPIT BALL NOT USED MUCH

BY FRANK G. MENKE.
(By International News Service)

The spit-ball is falling into disuse. Very few of the twirlers in the big leagues are using it today, and those who do are using it sparingly. The wise pitchers have cast it aside, knowing that even though the use of the moist fling may add to their strength of victories it will mean the shortening of their careers.

Jack Chesbro, used it back in 1904 when he almost pitched the Yankees into the leadership of the league. But the use of the spit-ball practically ruined Chesbro as a star performer. Ed. Walsh used the spit-ball for several years and his success was phenomenal. But the price was high, for Walsh's arm today is in such condition that he never knows whether it will serve him the full route or whether a kink will appear and force him to surrender the hurling job to a relief pitcher.

They don't come back, eh? Well, look at what "Slim" Caldwell, a Yankee twirler, is doing these days.

"Slim," regarded as "all in" at the close of the 1913 season, has won eighteen games and lost seven this year for an average of .720 against a team average slightly over .400. The best part of Caldwell's showing is that practically all of his games have been small hit and small run affairs, with about a half dozen shutout victories mixed in.

If Caldwell, pitching in his present form, had the batting and fielding strength of the Athletics or Giants behind him, it is doubtful if he would have lost more than three of the 25 games he has pitched. The Yanks have played miserable baseball behind Caldwell at times and tossed away at least four games.

Caldwell wasn't of much use to the Yanks last year. He developed a sore arm soon after the season started. Instead of getting better, it became worse as the season drew to a close. Discouraged, Caldwell told his teammates:

"Next year 'Slim' will be back pounding the telegraph key while you fellows are frisking around in the sunshine. My arm is gone, I guess, and so I'm through."

Pitcher Jack Warhop later sidled over to "Slim" and slipped him an osteopath's card.

"Go and see him," advised Warhop. Caldwell did, and the kink was rubbed out of his arm in about four visits.

Here is what James P. Sinnott, writing in the New York Evening Mail, had to say recently after a visit to the rival ball clubs in Brooklyn:

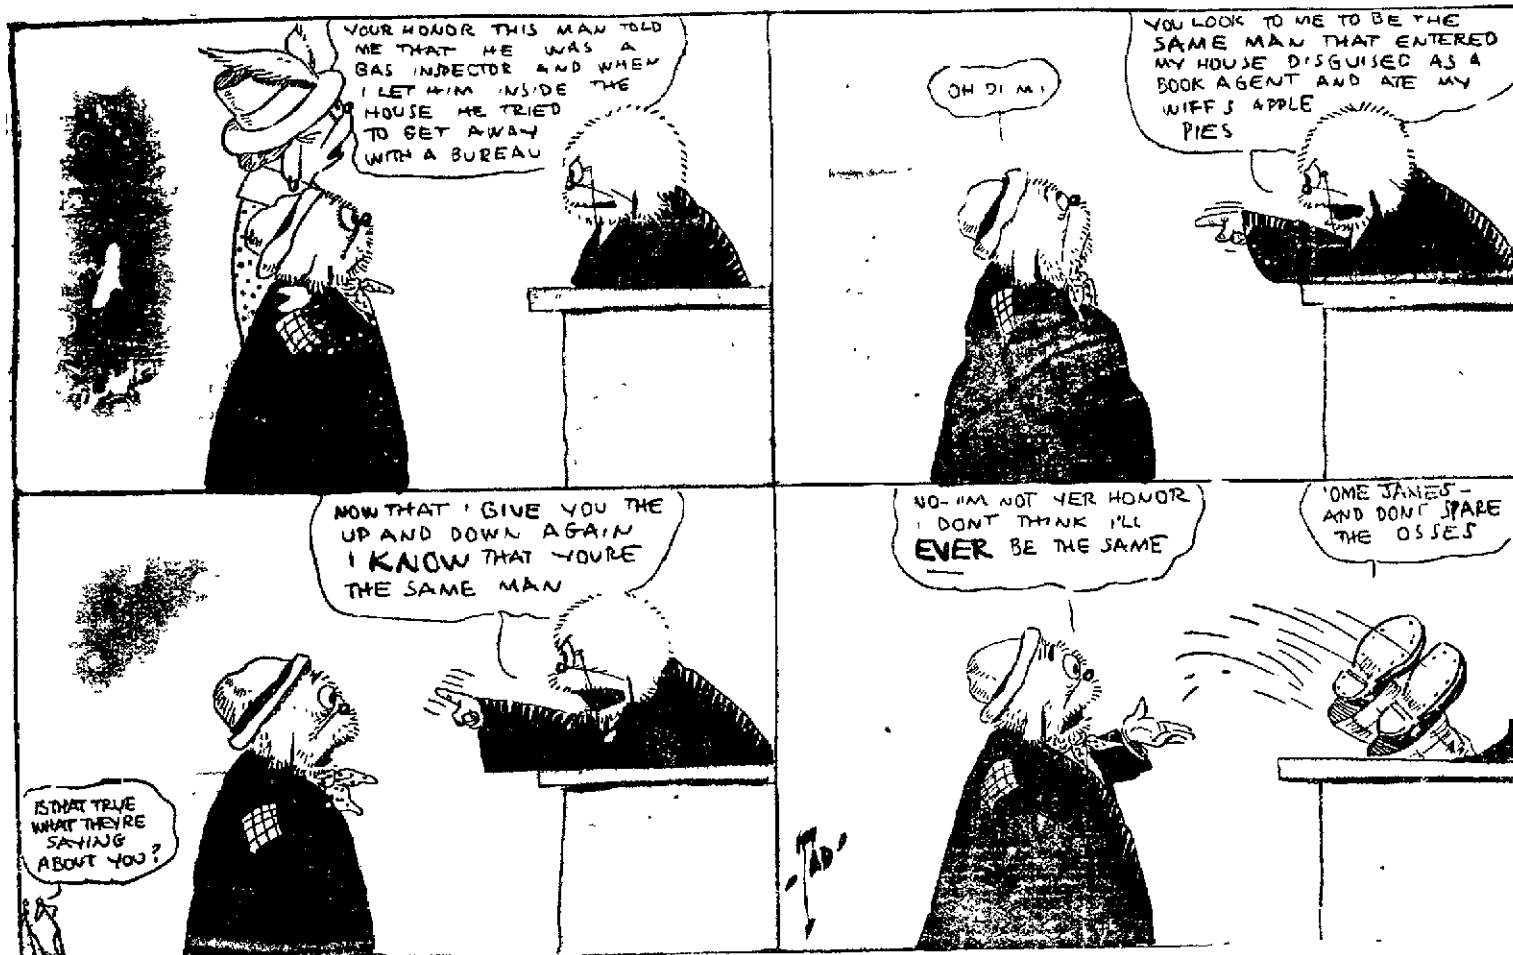

"Looking at the Brookfeds and Dodgers both on the same day, gives one a pretty good idea of their relative strength. To the writer's mind, the Brookfeds looked faster than the Dodgers, and even than the Reds.

"There is no doubting the fact that the Federals are giving a major league brand of ball, at least judged by the Brooklyn standard. The most radical of anti-Federalists, we believe will concede this—if they saw them play.

But that is just the trouble. The most bitter critics of the outlaws have as a rule, never seen them perform. Yet, unhesitatingly, they tell you the

Among those who plan to sail back to America this month are Jimmy Claby, Young Shugine, Edie McGoorty and Young Saylor.

Willie Ritchie isn't as disconsolate over the loss of his title as he was when he first lost it. He just has learned that Ad. Wolgast has made more money as an ex-champion than he did as a champion.

Willie, therefore, plans to set about this fall and winter and find out for himself just how easy the pickin's are. He probably will be matched with Charley White, of Chicago, in a twenty round bout and may go against Ad. Wolgast, Tommy Murphy, and Leach Cross in Coast battles.

Among the seedling fall apples, which have been recently sent to the Geneva experiment station the Livingston Pride deserves mention. It is a chance seedling from Orange county. It is not a dessert fruit, but is probably worth testing for culinary use. Season is the last of September and well into October.

ALL EUROPE IN ARMS

With the exception of Italy and a few second class nations all Europe is in arms. Italy is the only first-class power which has not yet declared war, but it is doubtful if she can long remain out of the fray. The final result of the war cannot even be dreamed of. That there will be sanguinary fights, the slaying of thousands of men and the destruction of much property, can be foretold, but no one can estimate the devastation that will follow in the path of war.

Germany, although professing to desire peace, has proven herself a very active warrior. The telegraph is news sent from the fields of operation state that German soldiers burn towns and destroy property in their path. The kaiser, however, evidently believes that this is the proper way to carry on war, as he asks his subjects to pray for success. To the people of America it would appear that the Lord is not taking much cognizance of any of the belligerents. He certainly does not approve of modern methods of warfare or excuse nations which have for going to war over trifles.

The little interest Americans take in the war is almost phenomenal. There are a good many people, whose ancestors came from countries involved in the struggle, who read the war news, but a majority of the Americans are content to read the headlines in the newspapers. In Clearfield there is considerable interest taken in the war, as is attested by the crowds which gather around the bulletins posted in the office window of the Progress and by the fact that the subscription list of this paper is being added to in a most gratifying manner. The war news dispatched to the Progress is fresh and reliable, as is confirmed by the daily newspapers in the big cities the next day.

The kaiser's prayers seem to have been answered contrariwise thus far.

Don't forget that Clearfield will have a big time on Labor day.

The joy rider was also among those present at the Frenchville picnic.

But isn't it just as well to let the readers of the Progress judge what kind of news they want?

Tomorrow the Red Men will own Curwensville, but they will have to take their firewater with them.

MASSIVE FORTIFICATIONS ON THE FRONTIER OF BELGIUM

Washington, Aug. 6.—American army officers think in the campaign through Belgium lies Germany's only hope of marching her soldiers into France. Even allowing for the necessity of crushing the Belgian army, the experts here regard this as the most feasible point of attack.

For nearly forty years the French engineers, among the ablest in the world in scientific design, have been laboring like beavers constructing fortifications of earth and steel, even including great revolving turrets like those of a dreadnaught, that now practically cover every mile of the frontier between France and Germany and south of Belgium. In the estimate of army engineers, these defenses are invulnerable except as against an army vastly outnumbering the French forces behind the parapets and in the rifle pits.

The beginning of the campaign in Belgium had been expected here and the outcome is being awaited with great interest by the general staff. The belief is that the Belgians for the present will confine themselves to obstructive tactics on the German frontier, feinting and skirmishing and falling back so as to reduce their percentage of loss and losing no opportunity to harass the advancing German army, and, if possible, to cut its line of communication.

While this is going on American strategists believe the French forces, which are very numerous in the neighborhood of Rheims, and to the north and south of that fortress, will come to the aid of the Belgians.

Thus, it was suggested, within one year of a century after the defeat of Napoleon at Waterloo the Germans and French and Belgians may again come together in a desperate and decisive battle in almost the same theatre of war.

MANY ALIENS TAKE OUT THEIR FIRST PAPERS HERE

The statement going the rounds of the newspapers that hundreds of aliens had applied for their first naturalization papers in one day at the prothonotary's office here is incorrect. There are quite a number of applications for first papers in this county, but not as many as has been reported.

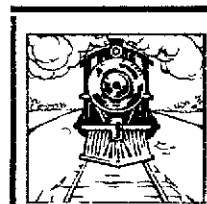

Since the first of the present year first papers have been issued by the prothonotary's office to 190 aliens, the applicants renouncing allegiance to the rulers of their native land being distributed among the following nationalities:

Austria	62
Italy	30
Russia	23
Hungary	22
Germany	17
England	15
Sweden	8
Scotland	5
France	2
Canada	2
Poland	1

Belgium	1

Many of these men declared that they had no desire to return to fight for their native lands.

SHAREHOLDERS OF THE PENNSY

The number of stockholders of the Pennsylvania railroad company on June 30 was 90,114 the highest ever reported. These holders are distributed all over the world. At this time there are 30,617 in Pennsylvania, 15,380 in New York, 15,542 in New England, 11,622 in foreign countries and 15,753 are reported as scattered. There are 43,454 women stockholders. Corporations owning the shares number 692.

The stockholders of the Pennsylvania's subsidiary are estimated to number 25,000 so that there are now at least 115,114 individual owners of the shares of the Pennsylvania system. This is the largest number of any railroad company in the world, and the total number of individual investors in Pennsylvania shares is approximately as large as any company. Including the bondholders, it may be said that the investors in Pennsylvania securities number considerable more than half a million. The number of bondholders is about 400,000, so that, to be exact, there are 515,000 individual owners of the stock and bonds.

SAGE TEA KEEPS YOUR HAIR DARK

When Mixed with Sulphur It Brings Back Its Lustre and Abundance.

Gray hair, however handsome, denotes advancing age. We all know the advantages of a youthful appearance. Your hair is your charm. It makes or mars the face. When it fades, turns gray and looks dry, wispy and scraggly, just a few applications of Sage Tea and Sulphur enhances its appearance a hundred-fold.

Don't stay gray! Look young! Either prepare the tonic at home or get from any drug store a 50 cent bottle.

Use of "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Hair Remedy." Thousands of folks recommend this ready-to-use preparation, because it darkens the hair beautifully, and removes dandruff, stops scalp itching and falling hair; besides, no one can possibly tell, as it darkens so naturally and evenly. You moisten a sponge or soft brush with it, drawing this through the hair, taking one small strand at a time. By morning the gray hair disappears; after another application or two, its natural color is restored and it becomes thick, glossy and lustrous, and you appear years younger.

WHEN FRANCE AND PRUSSIA FOUGHT

War of Forty-Four Years Ago Recalled by Present Events

NAPOLEON'S DEFEAT RECALLED

Brief Story of the Struggle in Which the French Were Worst and Paris Captured by the Prussians—Another Von Moltke Was in the Field Then.

(By International News Service.)
New York, Aug. 6.—When the Prussians under Kaiser Wilhelm I, with Count Bismarck and Gen. von Moltke, started the movement against Paris forty-four years ago the German troops were met with fierce resistance on every hand. From the time they crossed the border into France it took the Germans a full six months to capture the French capital.

The first order to mobilize the Prussian army was given by Kaiser Wilhelm I on July 1870. France declared war four days later. Three armies were put in the field by the Prussians. The first was under Gen. von Steinmetz near Trever, the second under Prince Frederick Charles in the Reinisch Palatinate, and the third under the Crown Prince of Prussia on the frontier of Baden. Fifteen days after the mobilization order had been given Prussia had 520,000 men under arms.

A line 100 miles long from Montmedy on the Belgian frontier to Belfort at the junction of the Swiss and German borders, was covered by an army of 350,000 men under Napoleon III. The French army was divided into eight army corps with Marshal MacMahon near Strassburg, Gen. Faidy at Betsch, on the Palatinate frontier; Marshal Bazaine near Metz, Gen. Frossard at Saint Avold, near the Prussian frontier; Gen. Ladmirault at Thionville (now called Diedenhofen by the Germans); the reserve corps under Gen. Bombaki and Marshal Canrobert at Nancy and Chalons and Gen. Felix Douay holding the fortress at Belfort.

It was July 28 that Emperor Napoleon left Paris to take command at Metz and on August 2 Kaiser Wilhelm with Count Bismarck and Gen. von Moltke took the field with headquarters at Maniz.

Searbrucken was attacked and captured on August 2 by Frossard. France was invaded by the German crown prince on August 4. He engaged the French under Douay, at Weissenburg and drove them back after a terrific five-hour fight in which the losses were heavy on both sides.

Again two days later the crown prince engaged the French. This time he met MacMahon's men at Zouthern and forced them to retreat in disorder. Stainmetz, in the meantime routed Frossard's corps at Spichern, driving the French back to Metz and Forbach.

Following these disastrous defeats the eight French corps were consolidated into two armies, one under Bazaine at Metz and the other under MacMahon at Chalons. It was shortly thereafter that the northern part of Alsace was abandoned while the French retreated along the Moselle.

On August 8, the crown-prince left Worth to push on through the passes of the Vosges to Nancy. He entered the city on August 16. In the meantime Steinmetz was the most active man in the German army. He took Forbach on the 7th, St. Avold on the 9th, and on the 14th was near Metz.

In the battle of Colombey-Nouilly, Gen. Von Moltke prevented the junction of the two retreating French armies.

Bent on the capture of Metz, Prince Frederick Charles took part of his army via Searbrucken and part through Seargemund, and on the 16th of August drove Bazaine back on Crellorow. He was defeated on the 18th and cornered in the fortifications of Metz.

On August 19 the Prussians formed a fourth army to move rapidly through the plains of Champagne to Paris. The Crown Prince of Saxony was placed in charge of this fourth command. One hundred and thirty thousand men were concentrated at Cholon under MacMahon to defend Paris. On August 21 MacMahon moved to Rheims, and under orders from Paris attempted to relieve Metz.

His division was cut off by the Prussians at Sedan, surrounded and overwhelmed. He surrendered on September 2, being taken prisoner with the emperor. The battle of Sedan was the most disastrous of the entire war.

The surrender of Strassburg came September 28 and on October 11, Gen. Vonder Tann occupied Orleans. Metz was surrendered by Bazaine on October 27. Gen. de Callasiness, in a heroic effort, recaptured Orleans from the Prussians on November 10, but was defeated in a battle lasting from December 2 till December 4.

In vain Gen. Ducrot tried to break the strong Prussian lines at Berle, and on December 29 the Prussians captured Mount Averon one of the forts defending Paris. Rouen was captured by the Prussians on December 6 and the French were overwhelmed at St. Quentin January 19. Paris finally capitulated on December 28, 1871.

BOROUGH COUNCIL IN LONG SESSION

which would be vacated for anything else than a street. He asked that the matter be attended to. He is willing to give a bond indemnifying the borough from any damage which might be suffered by any person through the straightening of the street.

Hazard Murray, Esq., spoke in opposition to the paving of what is known as an extension of the "Boodle" alley. He thought the property owners in that alley should not be asked to pay for a pavement which would be of benefit to nobody but a garage owner.

Mr. Hagerty, of the finance committee, reported that he had interviewed Mr. Kurtz, and the latter had said he would print the borough bonds for $75.

Mr. Heck reported that his committee was opposed to permitting the placing of gasoline tanks under the sidewalk of the borough because of the damage to adjoining property.

The proposition of Contractor Ferguson to construct the combined curbing and gutter on North Second street at his bid of 53 cents per lineal foot, was reported favorably by the utilities committee. This work cannot be done until after property owners shall have been given 30 days notice that the curbing and gutters will be constructed. Some of the property owners are opposed to the placing of new curbing.

President Kerr appointed Burgess Callahan, Borough Solicitor Urey and Eugene Hess, with himself, to call on the property owners to see if they will waive the 30 days notice.

The committee's report on the bid of Mr. Ferguson, accepting his bid for the curbing, was adopted.

An ordinance relating to the improvement bond issue was passed.

The resignation of H. S. Buck, member of council from the Fourth ward, was accepted. Mr. Buck's work on the railroad prevents his regular attendance at council meetings. The Fourth ward members were asked to suggest candidates to fill the vacancy resulting from Mr. Buck's resignation.

The ladies in charge of the public playground sent a communication in regard to what apparatus they proposed to buy for the amusement of the children. Council appropriated $150 to the purpose, providing the apparatus be placed under supervision of the public property committee.

Council decided to advertise the entire issue of improvement bonds at once.

An ordinance providing for the construction of a sewer on Hannah street was passed.

It was decided to advertise for plans and specifications for the new fire houses in the Second and Fourth wards and for bids for the erection of the same.

The street commissioner was directed to start the work of constructing the Spruce street sewer.

Other matters of more or less moment were discussed and acted upon, council adjourning before midnight.

IN THE MOVIES

"THE CASTAWAYS" WILL PLEASE THE PEOPLE

"In Sea."

"The Castaways" is a thrilling narrative dramatized from the famous novel written by Jules Verne. It is a thrilling story of the search of the children of Captain Grant for him when he had been castaway on a desert island. The search leads them through all kinds of dangerous and hazardous scenes, boats pass but do not at first see the frantic signaling of the men cast upon the island. This picture in 5 reels will be shown this evening at the New opera house.

"The Girl and the Hobo" is a frontier comedy in one act which will be shown at the opera house this evening. This story was written to make people laugh and it has succeeded, for no person in the audience can help joining in the hearty laughter that the funny scenes show.

"Thou Shalt Not Steal" is a photo play in 2 reels which will be shown at the new opera house this evening. It is a real live drama with an interesting plot.

Besides the good program which the manager of the opera house has prepared for his patrons he has another pleasure in store for them.

The stubs of tickets used at the opera house this evening will be good for a drink at Dooly & Stewart drug store.

Mary Fuller, the supreme screen star, will enact the lead in "The Heart of the Night Wind," and this will be her first picture with the Universal Film company. Accompanied by her director, Walter Edwin together with Charles Ogle, Ed Mortimer and an enlarged company, Miss Fuller left New York, July 17, for Shohola, Pike county, Pa., where amid some of the most beautiful settings in America, this play and several others, including "Heart of the Hills" by Hal Reid, will be produced.

"The Heart of the Night Wind" is from the book of Vingie E. E. Roe, and was adapted to picture form by Captain Leslie T. Penelope, of the Universal scenario department. In three reels, the play allows Miss Fuller a splendid part, combining vigor, emotion and some highly spectacular scenes.

Dr. R. L. Williams, of Houtzdale, had business in town Wednesday.

The Adventures of Kathlyn

By HAROLD MAC GRATH

Illustrated by Pictures from the Moving Picture Production of the Selig Polyscope Co.

(Copyright by Harold MacGrath)

"But we cheered the white goddess that day! There are men who will swear that her feet never touched the earth as she walked. But I knew that she was the daughter of Colonel Sahib,

A Woman Who Loved Him Hid Him in a Palanquin.

and that she had red blood in her veins, like the rest of us. Women are mysteries. Here was one who fought like an ancient warrior; and yet she swooned in her father's arms! That is all today, hazard. I am an old man, and my throat dries quickly. Come tomorrow and I will tell you more."

But tomorrow comes to find you interested in something else; and the old beggar jingles his bowl before the steps of the mosque, patiently waiting for another listener.

"Kit, Kit!" cried Kathlyn's father when she came to her senses. "My girl, my girl!"

"Dad?"

"How could you do it?"

"Do what?" vaguely.

"Lead a forlorn cause to victory; you, a girl!"

She brushed back the hair which tumbled about her eyes, glanced at the powder-stained faces grouped about her, glanced at the toppled throne, at Bruce, at Ramabai. She made an effort to explain, but the words would not come.

"I would not question her," said Bruce to the colonel. "For my part, I never so thoroughly believed in God as I do now. She does not realize what she has done."

The colonel bent his head reverently.

"We owe our lives to her," said Ramabai. "Somewhere in the dim ages there was a great mother, and today her soul entered the memsahib."

"Mine!" murmured Bruce. "This beautiful, strange woman is mine! God send the day quickly when I can take her in my arms and guard her! Ramabai," he said aloud, "go to the balcony and proclaim Pundita queen. Let us have done with this before there is any chance of Umballa recovering. What shall we do with the Council?"

"Wait!" responded Ramabai. "It is for another to say." And he pointed to the marble flags at his feet.

And all understood what honor meant to this man of dark skin.

"Now," he continued, "I wish to go home at once. We will leave a sufficient guard here to watch over the palace. My wife waits; and the death of Lal Singh may have—"

The same thought flashed through Kathlyn's mind; the dagger. Dying Lal Singh had declared that Ramabai was a prisoner; and well would Pundita comprehend what that meant.

"Yes, yes! let us go quickly!" Kathlyn cried. Pundita might be dead and Winnie crazed with grief.

They left the palace immediately. The overthrow of Umballa seemed to be complete. Everywhere the soldiers surrendered; for it was better to have road in the stomach than lead. Tomorrow there would be many a pyre at the burning ghats, but today was a day of victory.

Every one began to hunt for Umballa. There was as yet no price on his head; it was the zest of hunting only that set the people to it. They ran in and out of Umballa's house, and were not above looting, though word had come forth that Ramabai would have every looter shot if found in the act. But search as they would, they could find no trace of Umballa.

A woman who loved him—the only one loyal to him in all Allahabad that day—had hidden him in a palanquin in the garden of brides. Crouched down in the narrow space shuddering at the sound of shot, whether near or far, for a thousand deaths, wishing he had been taken from the gutter, he gave up his jewels, his life to live.

The woman of the zenana, when the tumult died away completely, found some slaves. She made them divest themselves of the royal turbans and assume ordinary white ones. Then she told them to carry the palanquin to a certain house in the fruit bazaar, to go by side streets, alleys, passages, to avoid all gatherings. Once in the house of her sister, the dancer, Umballa would be safe till he could secretly return to his own house and enter the secret chamber.

When Kathlyn left the palace a thunder of cheers greeted her. Kathlyn was forced to mount the durbar throne, much as she longed to be off. But Bruce anticipated her thought and dispatched one of the revolutionists to the house of Ramabai. Kathlyn held out her hands towards the excited populace, then turned to Ramabai expressively. Ramabai, calm and unruffled as ever, stepped forward and was about to address the people, when the disheveled captain of the guard, whom Umballa had sent to the arena lions, pushed his way to the foot of the platform.

"The arena lions have escaped!"

And there were a dozen lions in all, strong, cruel, and no doubt hungry!

Panic. Men who had been at each other's throat, bravely and hardily, turned and fled. It was a foolish panic, senseless, but, like all panics, uncontrollable. Those on the platform ran down the steps and at once were swallowed up by the pressing, trampling crowd.

Bruce and the colonel, believing that Kathlyn was behind them, fought their way to a clearing, determined to secure nets and take the lions alive. When they turned Kathlyn was gone. For a moment the two men stood as if paralyzed. Then Bruce relieved the tension by smiling. He laid his hand on the colonel's shoulder.

"She has lost us; but that will not matter. Ordinarily I should be wild with anxiety; but today Kathlyn may go where she will, and nothing but awe and reverence will follow her. Besides, she has her revolver."

"I believe you're right. She will miss us and start right off for Ramabai's. Boy, she is a goddess. She is supernatural."

"She was this morning. As God is judge, I do not believe she understands or ever will understand what she did. You noticed her eyes? They were like those of a person in a trance. Think of it. To turn the tide at the supreme moment! That coat of mail; her hair falling about her head."

"Ah, colonel, what's the use of beating about the bush? You know I love her. Will you give her to me?"

Without a moment's hesitation the colonel said: "Yes, John. You have proved yourself a man. God bless you both! But we're not out of the woods yet. We've got to find Umballa and lock him up. When that's done I'll be able to breathe."

"I believe it is as Ahmed says: we'll all pull out of this safely in the end. Now, let's go and get the nets. There will not be a dozen men in the whole town who will have sense enough to shoot the lions as they appear. They'll howl and run for shelter. Ramabai's welcome to Allah. Hi, there's one now; see, coming round the corner! I'll put him."

But ere Bruce could level his weapon the lion turned back, perhaps frightened at the clamor.

Kathlyn was not alarmed upon finding herself separated from the two men she loved so well. Her only concern was to avoid being knocked down and trampled upon. She knew animals. If left quietly to themselves the lions would make for the jungle, but if harried or frightened they would maul any one within reach.

Kathlyn was packed in rather closely, and she was carried past the street which led to the house of Ramabai, though she struggled desperately to push through. She was presently carried into the bazaars. The people in their senseless flight tried to do what they could for her, but self-preservation was their first thought. And it wasn't the cleanest smelling crowd in the world, either.

At the same time Kathlyn was fighting vigorously to get free of the mob. Winnie was struggling with Pundita, striving to wrench the dagger from the grief-stricken wife's hand.

"No, no, Pundita!"

"Let me go! My lord is dead, and I wish to follow!"

"You are a Christian!"

"At all!"

"But he may not be dead. Help, help!"

"Is not Lal Singh there dead? Is that not proof?"

Hither and thither across the floor they fought. But Winnie soon realized that Pundita, being in a frenzy, was strongest. The struggle ended quickly, however, but not through Winnie's efforts. Pundita did something unexpected; she fainted, dragging Winnie to the floor with her. The young girl's head came into contact with the wall, and she was stunned for a moment.

ment. Upon sitting up she did not know exactly where she was. But the calm, high-bred face of the dead Lal Singh recalled the situation clearly, and she went about the resuscitation of Pundita.

As the latter's eyes opened wildly Winnie heard a pounding at the door. She was pulled two ways. If she answered the summons Pundita might take advantage of her absence and kill herself. Again, it might be the help for which she had called.

Instinctively she snatched up the fallen dagger, ran to the door, peered out cautiously, and recognized one of the revolutionists who had left the house but an hour or two since. She lunged open the door.

"Pundita?" cried the man.

Winnie caught him by the sleeve and dragged him into the chamber just in time. The distracted Pundita had plucked another dagger from the wall, and the man stayed her arm even as she struck.

"Highness," he cried, "he lives!" And he recounted the startling events of the morning, the treachery of the palace troops, the coming of Kathlyn in chain armor, the turn of the tide.

"They live!" cried Pundita, and covered her face.

Winnie had not understood a word said, but the expression on Pundita's face was illuminative. She threw her arms around the native woman, and the two of them went in common. All human beings have two faculties alike, that of weeping and laughing.

To return to Kathlyn: by and by she was able to slip into a doorway, and the bawling rabble passed on down the narrow street. The house was deserted, and the hallway and what had been a booth was filled with rubbish. Kathlyn, as she leaned breathlessly against the door, felt it give. And very glad she was of this knowledge a moment later, when two lions galloped into the street, their manes still, their tails arched. Doubtless, they were badly frightened.

Kathlyn reached for the revolver she carried and fired at the animals, not expecting to hit one of them, but hoping that the noise of the firearms would serve them into the passage across the way. Instead, they came straight to where she stood.

She stepped inside and slammed the door, holding it and feeling about in vain for lock or bolt.

Evidently the lions had halted outside, undecided, for she could hear them sniffling at the doorsill. If they leaped she was lost, for she could not hope to hold the door against the onrush of beasts as heavy as these lions were.

Elsewhere in the bazaars the colonel, Bruce, and Ahmed were setting nets for the recapture of the lions, quite confident that Kathlyn was by this time safe in the haven of Ramabai's house.

The girl glanced hurriedly over her shoulder toward the dim rickety staircase. The moment the sniffling ceased she withdrew from the door and ran up the stairs to the first landing, to find all these doors lockless! A crash below announced that the lions had heard her and had entered. There was a second flight, and up this flew the girl. She might fire at the beasts, and even if she succeeded in hitting them it would serve only to madden them. One cannot kill lions with a toy.

Still lockless doors! No safety. She then espied a ladder which gave to the roof top, and up this she climbed. They could not possibly follow her up the ladder, and as she reached the top she knew that for the present she had nothing to fear from the lions.

The interior of the house was of the flimsiest wood, slovenly put together. Along the roof was a parapet. She left the trap open so that she could see all that went on below. Almost as she looked the tawny bodies swept up to the foot of the ladder, and there remained, snarling and spitting and reaching up as far as they could. Somewhere on the way Kathlyn knew that these lions had tasted blood.

It was in this street dwelt the sister of the woman in the zenana, the woman who loved Umballa.

Kathlyn leaned over the parapet, the street was totally deserted. All the doors of the shops were closed and the windows shut. She must fight it out alone. She drew a deep breath and squared her shoulders, a trick she had long ago learned from her father. She had fought battles alone ere this, so she was not without confidence. Perhaps the lions, finding their efforts futile, would depart. She must wait.

It grew to noon. The sun beat down upon her savagely. Here and there she could see fires in the city. Pillage. The muezzin's tower of the mosque was like a finger pointing to heaven. She could even glimpse a patch of white stucco which belonged to the palace.

And she had fought her way that morning to the steps of the palace, as the daughter of the Goth had scaled

the steps of the Quirinal in Rome! It was unbelievable! She could not remember anything but the dead Lal Singh and the strong arms of her father as she came out of her swoon. And she had turned defeat into victory! She drew her hand across her eyes.

"The Arena Lions Have Escaped!"

One of the lions sent up a nerve-shaking roar; but Kathlyn did not stir. Silence.

Then, round the passage she saw a palanquin, carried by slaves. She leaned far over.

"Help!" she cried. "Help!"

The bearers paused abruptly, and the curtain of the palanquin was swept back. The dark sinister visage of Umballa was revealed.

"Thou?" he said. Then his laughter rose up to the girl, motionless through her terror. "Come down, O houri of Allah! Come to the arms of Durga Ram, who loves you! Will not? Wee to thee!" dropping his mockery.

"Yes, Durga Ram, it is I!" replied Kathlyn, finding her voice, insensate rage usurping the throne of terror. "Here I am! come and take me!"

Let him face the lions!

Umballa left the palanquin, opened the door of the house, espied the rubbish in the hall; was in the act of mounting the first steps when one of the lions roared again. Drunk as he was, filled with a drunkard's courage, Umballa started back. The lions! Out into the street he went. He turned to the bearers and ordered them to fire the inflammables in the hall. But they refused, for they recognized the chain armor. Mad with rage, Umballa struck at them, entered the hall again, and threw a lighted match into the rubbish.

He left the horrified bearers and staggered to the house where he was to find shelter. He was admitted, the door closed and barred. From a window he watched the progress of the fire. At last! He would pass from Allah, but not without his revenge. It was sweet! She could not escape; the lions would bar the way till it was too late. Let her God save her if he could!

Marshmallow Pudding.
One-half pound marshmallows, each cut into three or four pieces with scissors into a dish you will serve it from. Add one can shredded pineapple and let stand several hours. Just before serving cover top with whipped cream. This is truly delicious. You can substitute any other fruit, but I am very fond of the pineapple.

Raspberry Whip.
Simplest of all raspberry desserts is raspberry whip. This calls for the whites of egg beaten very light, flavored to taste with powdered sugar and flavored with the fresh juice of crushed raspberries. It should be mixed just before serving.

Notice to Advertisers!

A new rate for advertising will be in effect on Saturday, August 1st, 1914, and copies of this rate in pamphlet form will be ready for distribution August 1, 1914. This new rate is made necessary by the greatly increased circulation, and cost of publication of the Progress. The present circulation is about five times larger than a year ago. Many new features have been, and will be added, such as "Bud" Fisher's "Mutt and Jeff," a daily news illustration service, a free cut, or illustration service for advertisers, (proofs of which may be obtained at this office), and last but not least, our daily news service; all of which will make the Daily Progress a real up to the minute daily. The Progress goes into nearly every home in Clearfield and has an excellent circulation in most of the homes throughout the surrounding country, so that the new rate will not meet with much, if any disapproval.
